

AN INTRODUCTION TO INDIAN PHILOSOPHY

SATISCHANDRA CHATTERJEE

And

DHIRENDRAMOHAN DATTA

RUPA

Contents

|                                |       |
|--------------------------------|-------|
| Preface to the First Edition   | xv    |
| Preface to the Second Edition  | xvi   |
| Preface to the Sixth Edition   | xviii |
| Preface to the Seventh Edition | xviii |

CHAPTER I

|                      |      |
|----------------------|------|
| GENERAL INTRODUCTION | 1-51 |
|----------------------|------|

|                                                               |           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| I. The Basic Features of Indian Philosophy             | 1  |
| 1. The Nature of Philosophy                                   | 1         |
| 2. The Meaning and Scope of Indian Philosophy                 | 3         |
| 3. The Schools of Indian Philosophy                           | 5         |
| 4. The Places of Authority and Reasoning in Indian Philosophy | 7         |
| 5. How the Indian Systems Gradually Developed                 | 9         |
| 6. The Common Characters of the Indian Systems                | 12        |
| 7. The Space-Time Background                                  | 22        |
| II. A Brief Sketch of the Systems                      | 24 |
| 1. The Cārvāka System                                         | 24        |
| 2. The Jaina System                                           | 26        |
| 3. The Bauddha System                                         | 29        |

|                         |    |
|-------------------------|----|
| 4. The Nyāya System     | 32 |
| 5. The Vaiśeṣika System | 35 |
| 6. The Sāṅkhya System   | 38 |
| 7. The Yoga System      | 42 |
| 8. The Mīmāṃsā System   | 43 |
| 9. The Vedānta System   | 46 |

CHAPTER II

THE CĀRVĀKA PHILOSOPHY 52-67

|                                                |    |
|------------------------------------------------|----|
| I. Its Origin and Scope                        | 52 |
| II. The Cārvāka Epistemology                   | 53 |
| 1. Inference is not Certain                    | 54 |
| 2. Testimony is not a Safe Source of Knowledge | 57 |
| III. Metaphysics                               | 58 |
| 1. The World is made of Four Elements          | 58 |
| 2. There is no Soul                            | 59 |
| 3. There is no God                             | 60 |
| IV. Ethics                                     | 61 |
| V. Conclusion                                  | 63 |

CHAPTER III

THE JAINA PHILOSOPHY 68-105

|                                                            |    |
|------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| I. Introduction                                            | 68 |
| II. The Jaina Theory of Knowledge                          | 70 |
| 1. The Nature and Kinds of Knowledge                       | 70 |
| 2. The Cārvāka View Criticised                             | 73 |
| 3. The Jaina Theory of Judgment                            | 74 |
| (i) Syādvāda or the Theory that Every Judgment is Relative | 74 |

|                                                     |    |
|-----------------------------------------------------|----|
| (ii) Saptabhaṅginaya or the Seven Forms of Judgment | 77 |
|-----------------------------------------------------|----|

III. The Jaina Metaphysics 81

|                                       |    |
|---------------------------------------|----|
| 1. The Jaina Conception of Substance  | 82 |
| 2. Classification of Substances       | 85 |
| 3. The Soul or Jiva                   | 87 |
| 4. The Inanimate Substances or Ajīvas | 90 |
| (i) Matter or Pudgala                 | 90 |
| (ii) Space or Ākāśa                   | 91 |
| (iii) Time or Kāla                    | 92 |
| (iv) Dharma and Adharma               | 93 |

IV. The Jaina Ethics and Religion 94

|                                      |     |
|--------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. Bondage of the Soul               | 94  |
| 2. Liberation                        | 97  |
| 3. Jainism as a Religion without God | 103 |

CHAPTER IV

THE BAUDDHA PHILOSOPHY 106-148

|                                                                                   |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| I. Introduction                                                                   | 106 |
| II. The Teachings of Buddha: The Four Noble Truths                                | 108 |
| 1. The Anti-speculative Attitude                                                  | 108 |
| 2. The First Noble Truth about Suffering                                          | 110 |
| 3. The Second Noble Truth about the Cause of Suffering: the Chain of Twelve Links | 111 |
| 4. The Third Noble Truth about the Cessation of Suffering                         | 114 |
| 5. The Fourth Noble Truth about the Path to Liberation                            | 118 |
| 6. The Philosophical Implications of Buddha's Ethical Teachings                   | 123 |

|                                                                            |            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (i) The Theory of Dependent Origination or Conditional Existence of Things | 124        |
| (ii) The Theory of Karma                                                   | 125        |
| (iii) The Doctrine of Universal Change and Impermanence                    | 125        |
| (iv) The Theory of the Non-existence of the Soul                           | 127        |
| III. The Schools of Bauddha Philosophy                              | 129 |
| 1. The Mādhyamika School of Sūnya-vāda                                     | 132        |
| 2. The Yogācāra School of Subjective Idealism                              | 137        |
| 3. The Sautrāntika School of Representationism                             | 140        |
| 4. The Vaibhāṣika School                                                   | 142        |
| IV. The Religious Schools of Buddhism: Hānayāna and Mahāyāna        | 143 |

CHAPTER V

|                                               |                |
|-----------------------------------------------|----------------|
| THE NYĀYA PHILOSOPHY                   | 149-210 |
| I. Introduction                        | 149     |
| II. The Nyāya Theory of Knowledge      | 156     |
| 1. Definition and Classification of Knowledge | 156            |
| 2. Perception                                 | 159            |
| (i) Definition of Perception                  | 159            |
| (ii) Classification of Perception             | 160            |
| (iii) Extraordinary Perception                | 161            |
| (iv) Three Modes of Ordinary Perception       | 163            |
| 3. Inference                                  | 165            |
| (i) Definition of Inference                   | 165            |
| (ii) The constituents of Inference            | 166            |
| (iii) The Grounds of Inference                | 169            |
| (iv) The Classification of Inference          | 175            |
| (v) The Fallacies of Inference                | 180            |
| 4. Upamāna or Comparison                      | 183            |

|                                                                 |            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 5. Śabda or Testimony                                           | 185        |
| (i) The Nature and Classification of Śabda                      | 185        |
| (ii) The Logical Structure of a Sentence                        | 187        |
| III. The Nyāya Theory of the Physical World              | 189 |
| IV. The Individual Self and its Liberation               | 191 |
| V. The Nyaya Theology                                    | 196 |
| 1. The Idea of God                                              | 197        |
| 2. Proofs for the Existence of God                              | 198        |
| (i) The Causal Argument                                         | 198        |
| (ii) The Argument from Adṛṣṭa                                   | 200        |
| (iii) The Argument from the Authoritativeness of the Scriptures | 202        |
| (iv) The Testimony of Śruti                                     | 203        |
| 3. Anti-theistic Arguments                                      | 207        |
| VI. Conclusion                                           | 209 |

CHAPTER VI

|                                                       |                |
|-------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| THE VAIŚEŚIKA PHILOSOPHY                       | 211-236 |
| I. Introduction                                | 211     |
| II. The Categories                             | 213     |
| 1. Substance or Dravya                                | 213            |
| 2. Quality or Guṇa                                    | 218            |
| 3. Action or Karma                                    | 221            |
| 4. Generality or Sāmānya                              | 222            |
| 5. Particularity or Viśeṣa                            | 224            |
| 6. Inherence or Samavāya                              | 225            |
| 7. Non-existence or Abāva                             | 227            |
| III. The Creation and Destruction of the World | 230     |
| IV. Conclusion                                 | 234     |

CHAPTER VII

THE SĀṆKHYA PHILOSOPHY

|                                      |     |
|--------------------------------------|-----|
| I. Introduction                      | 237 |
| II. The Sāṅkhya Metaphysics          | 238 |
| 1. Theory of Causation               | 238 |
| 2. Prakṛti and the Guṇas             | 241 |
| 3. Puruṣa or the Self                | 246 |
| 4. Evolution of the World            | 250 |
| III. The Sāṅkhya Theory of Knowledge | 257 |
| IV. The Doctrine of Liberation       | 262 |
| V. The Problem of God                | 267 |
| VI. Conclusion                       | 269 |

CHAPTER VIII

THE YOGA PHILOSOPHY

|                                  |     |
|----------------------------------|-----|
| I. Introduction                  | 271 |
| II. Yoga Psychology              | 274 |
| III. Yoga Ethics                 | 277 |
| 1. The Nature and Forms of Yoga  | 277 |
| 2. The Eightfold Means of Yoga   | 280 |
| IV. The Place of God in the Yoga | 285 |
| V. Conclusion                    | 287 |

CHAPTER IX

THE MĪMĀṆSĀ PHILOSOPHY

|                 |         |
|-----------------|---------|
| I. Introduction | 290-316 |
|                 | 290     |

II. The Mīmāṃsā Theory of Knowledge

291

|                                        |     |
|----------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. The Nature and Sources of Knowledge | 292 |
| 2. Non-perceptual Sources of Knowledge | 293 |
| (i) Comparison (upamāna)               | 293 |
| (ii) Authority or Testimony (śabda)    | 296 |
| (iii) Postulation (arthāpatti)         | 299 |
| (iv) Anupalabdhi or non-perception     | 301 |
| 3. The Validity of Knowledge           | 302 |
| 4. What is error?                      | 304 |

III. Mīmāṃsā Metaphysics

306

|                                                         |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. General Outlook                                      | 306 |
| 2. The Theory of Potential Energy(śakti and apūrva) | 308 |
| 3. The Mīmāṃsā Conception of Soul                       | 309 |

IV. Mīmāṃsā Religion and Ethics

311

|                                       |     |
|---------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. The Place of the Vedas in Religion | 311 |
| 2. The Conception of Duty             | 312 |
| 3. The Highest Good                   | 313 |
| 4. Is Mīmāṃsā Atheistic?              | 314 |

CHAPTER X

THE VEDĀNTA PHILOSOPHY

317-398

I. Introduction

317

|                                                                     |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. Origin and Development of the Vedānta                            | 317 |
| 2. How the Vedānta Developed through theVedas and the Upaniṣads | 320 |
| 3. The Unanimous Views of the mainschools of the Vedānta        | 330 |

II. The Monism of Śāṅkara (Advaita)

336

|                                      |     |
|--------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. Śāṅkara's Conception of the World | 336 |
|--------------------------------------|-----|

|                                                                  |            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| (i) The Rational Foundation of Śaṅkara'sTheory of the World. | 342        |
| (ii) The Advaita Theory of Error                                 | 351        |
| (iii) Criticism of Śaṅkara's Philosophy of theWorld          | 355        |
| 2. Śaṅkara's Conception of God                                   | 357        |
| (i) The Rational Basis of Śaṅkara'sTheory of God.            | 362        |
| 3. Śaṅkara's Conception of the self, Bondage andLiberation   | 367        |
| III. The Qualified Monism of Rāmānuja (Viśiṣṭādvaita)     | 382 |
| 1. Rāmānuja's Conception of the World                            | 382        |
| (i) Rāmānuja Criticism of the AdvaitaTheory of Māyā          | 385        |
| 2. Rāmānuja's Conception of God                                  | 387        |
| 3. Rāmānuja's Conception of the Self,Bondage and Liberation  | 390        |
| A Select Bibliography                                     | 399 |